Tuesday Morning,
May 27, 1862.

Dear Garrison,

68 I carelessly omitted yesterday to enclose the cartes de visite. Here they are.

I am more and more sorry that you allowed P. P.'s letter to be returned to him; for I am sure I shall be charged with denying the agents their rights of free speech in the Standard. I should not care for any better vindication than the letter itself affords.

But I write you now to beg you to return to me at once P. P.'s private letter sent you. I think, by hand of Theodore Tilton. There are very special reasons why I want that letter at once. It is a pity I have it not at this moment, to aid me in replying to another from P. P., most unfriendly and irate. So pray mail it to me at once.

Yours, faithfully,

T. J. Stevenson.
